The Hildebrant Center and the Leo Center are inpatient hospice centers for patients who need aggressive symptom management, respite care for family, or family teaching. They also offer a residence program for longer stays.

The admission process begins by calling the comfort care home and speaking to the director of admission. This call may be made by a social worker, care coordinator, doctor, family member, or friend. The director will set up an appointment to meet with the family and the potential resident wherever they are - home, hospital, nursing home, etc. Potential residents and their families will be able to ask questions about the House, and bed availability will be addressed. If the potential resident is appropriate for the House and a bed is available, a bed will be offered and arrangements can be made to move the resident to the House, usually within a few days. There is often a waiting list, but beds are offered to those with the most immediate or significant need. All services at the House are free and there is no expectation of donations or contributions by residents or family members. Admission is not determined by religion, age, or ethnic background.

Diagnosis of terminal illness with no expectation of recovery

A doctor's prognosis of three months or less life expectancy

Private physician coverage

No extraordinary care needs, such as IV's or feeding tubes
